

#DEMO2012 -MARCH ON PARLIAMENT

Wednesday 21 November, 11am
Assemble: Temple Place, London WC2R

The National Union of Students have called a national demonstration on November 21. As the Con-Dem government pushes forward with austerity, education is at the forefront of their attacks. The trebling of tuition fees has opened the door to a new regime of privatisation in colleges around the country.

Since the beginning of the academic year local campaigns and disputes are multiplying. Our Vice Chancellors are getting over paid, while courses are being shut down. Staff members and universities are being privatised by those who got their education for free. Education is increasingly being transformed into a luxury for the rich.

The NUS demonstration is a great opportunity to bring together all our different campaigns, and give confidence to all those involved in fighting for our education.

The student movement in Quebec is a great example of how we can win with mass militant action. They made the slogan of 2010 a reality: What parliament does – the street can undo. One demonstration will not be enough – we need local campaigns, strikes and regular national focuses. The N21 demo should be a building block for a wider movement against austerity in education.

Local assembly time/place:

#DEMO2012 -MARCH ON PARLIAMENT

Wednesday 21 November, 11am
Assemble: Temple Place, London WC2R

The National Union of Students have called a national demonstration on November 21. As the Con-Dem government pushes forward with austerity, education is at the forefront of their attacks. The trebling of tuition fees has opened the door to a new regime of privatisation in colleges around the country.

Since the beginning of the academic year local campaigns and disputes are multiplying. Our Vice Chancellors are getting over paid, while courses are being shut down. Staff members and universities are being privatised by those who got their education for free. Education is increasingly being transformed into a luxury for the rich.

The NUS demonstration is a great opportunity to bring together all our different campaigns, and give confidence to all those involved in fighting for our education.

The student movement in Quebec is a great example of how we can win with mass militant action. They made the slogan of 2010 a reality: What parliament does – the street can undo. One demonstration will not be enough – we need local campaigns, strikes and regular national focuses. The N21 demo should be a building block for a wider movement against austerity in education.

Local assembly time/place: